Born in Buffalo, Wyoming and raised on a ranch just outside of Buffalo it was pretty rough childhood. At the age of 16 Lou and a friend decided they wanted to see the world and forged each other signatures on the enlistment papers and they were in the U. S. Navy, and off to see the world. He was a sonar man and later became the crew's favorite baker during the Korean War.

Lou returned to Buffalo and married Jessie Murray. They became proud parents of two kids. In 1958 they moved Inglewood, Colorado . In 1964 the family moved to Garden Grove ,California where they spent 34 years raising a family. Lou became a true Mickey Mouse Mechanic working the rides at Disneyland in Anaheim, California. This provided an incredible playground to raise the kids where they enjoyed the park and great entertainment with their mom nearly every day during the summers for many years.

He later found his true niche in life when he bought a newspaper printing press company and traveled all over the country and world removing and installing three stories high and football long complex newspaper printing presses.

He received industry acclaim for his development and installation of the first ever suspended printing press for the Informs Newspaper in Mexico City. This was the first fully suspended newspaper press that was suspended to allow the press to move and avoid damage during their many earthquakes they have each year. It is still in use and has been duplicated many times around the world.

Lou & Jessie retired and built their beautiful dream home in Prescott Valley in 1999. IN the last few years Lou enjoyed watching sports and shooting the breeze with his friends at Tony's Place. Lou mostly enjoyed spending time with family and friends especially his beloved grandson Carson.
